For example, a .mocharc.json containing "require": "bar", coupled with execution of mocha --require foo, would cause Mocha to require foo, then bar, in that order.# Extending ConfigurationConfigurations can inherit from other modules using the extends keyword. This behavior enables a set of potential problems; it's indicative of tests (or fixtures, harnesses, code under test, etc.) which don't clean up after themselves properly, where you will succeed and why. Defaults to node_modules and .git.To exclude all files in a directory it is preferable to use foo/bar instead of foo/bar//. For example, to load .mjs and .js test files, you must supply --extension mjs --extension js.The option can be given multiple times. By default, Mocha uses the supports-color module to decide.In some cases, color output will be explicitly suppressed by certain reporters outputting in a machine-readable format.# --diffWhen possible, show the difference between expected and actual values when an assertion failure is encountered.This flag is unusual in that it defaults to true; use --no-diff to suppress Mocha's own diff output.Some assertion libraries will supply their own diffs, in which case Mocha's will not be used, regardless of the default value.Mocha's own diff output does not conform to any known standards, and is designed to be human-readable.New in v9.2.1By default strings are truncated to 8192 characters before generating a diff. In a world that seems to always be looking for what's wrong with you, isn't it time you find out WHAT'S RIGHT ABOUT YOU? Good if you prefer minimal output.# NyanAlias: Nyan, nyanThe Nyan reporter is exactly what you might expect.# TAPAlias: TAP, tapThe TAP reporter emits lines for a Test-Anything-Protocol consumer.# Landing StripAlias: Landing, landingThe Landing Strip reporter is a gimmicky test reporter simulating a plane landing @ unicode ftw # ListAlias: List, listThe List reporter outputs a simple specifications list as test cases pass or fail, outputting the failure details at the bottom of the output.# ProgressAlias: Progress, progressThe Progress reporter implements a simple progress-bar:# JSONAlias: JSON, jsonThe JSON reporter outputs a single large JSON object when the tests have completed (failures or not).By default, it will output to the console. For example: export const mochaHooks = { beforeEach: [function (done) { }, async function () { }] }; # Root Hook Plugins Can Export a FunctionIf you need to perform some logic-such as choosing a root hook conditionally, based on the environment-mochaHooks can be a function which returns the expected object. Mocha uses this to highlight test cases that are taking too long. If you want to set hooks to run, e.g., before each test, use a Root Hook Plugin.As of v8.0.0, Mocha supports --require for NodeJS native ESM. See Babel or TypeScript working examples.Modules required in this manner are expected to do work synchronously; Mocha won't wait for async tasks in a required module to finish.You cannot use --require to set hooks. If a hook is given a named function, that name will be used if no description is supplied.beforeEach(function () { }); beforeEach(function namedFun() { }); beforeEach('some description', function () { }); # Asynchronous HooksAll hooks (before(), after(), beforeEach(), afterEach()) may be sync or async as well, behaving much like a regular test-case. for each child suite; each child suite inherits any "before each" and "after each" hooks defined in its parentAny "after all" hooks (for the root suite, this only happens once; see root hook plugins)Mocha prints a final summary/epilog, if applicableMocha runs global teardown fixtures, if any# Parallel ModeRepeat steps 1 through 6 from Serial Mode above, skipping reporter validationAll test files found are put into a queue (they are not loaded by the main process)Mocha runs global setup fixtures, if anyMocha creates a pool of subprocesses ("workers")Immediately before a worker runs the first test it receives, the worker "bootstraps" itself by:Loading all --require'd modulesRegistering any root hook pluginsIgnoring global fixtures and custom reportersAsserting the built-in or custom interface is validWhen a worker receives a test file to run, the worker creates a new Mocha instance for the single test file, and:The worker repeats step 8 from aboveThe worker repeats step 10 from above, with the caveat that the worker does not report test results directly; it holds them in a memory bufferWhen the worker completes the test file, buffered results are returned to the main process, which then gives them to the user-specified reporter (spec by default)The worker makes itself available to the pool; the pool gives the worker another test file to run, if any remainMocha prints a final summary/epilog, if applicableMocha runs global teardown fixtures, if any# Detects Multiple Calls to done()If you use callback-based async tests, Mocha will throw an error if done() is called multiple times. Ask your manager or marketing team if they'd help support our project. It's not recommended to use this feature for unit tests.This feature does re-run a failed test and its corresponding beforeEach/afterEach hooks, but not before/after hooks. It can be used for example to assign a different database, service port, etc for each test process.# Root Hook PluginsNew in v8.0.0In some cases, you may want a hook before (or after) every test in every file. The priority is:.mocharc.js.mocharc.yaml.mocharc.yml.mocharc.jsonc.mocharc.json# MergingMocha will also merge any options found in package.json into its run-time configuration. For this reason, the timeouts of individual tests may need to be increased either globally or otherwise.# "Bail" is "Best Effort"When used with --bail (or this.bail()) to exit after the first failure, it's likely other tests will be running at the same time. Every release of Mocha will have new builds of ./mocha.js and ./mocha.css for use in the browser.A typical setup might look something like the following, where we call mocha.setup('bdd') to use the BDD interface before loading the test scripts, running them onload with mocha.run().
